Introduction

The City of New York is undertaking a community engagement process for the archaeologically sensitive site at 2286 Church Avenue, Block 5103, Lot 58 (project site) in the Flatbush neighborhood of Brooklyn, Kings County, New York. The project site is bordered by Church Avenue to the north, Bedford Avenue to the east, a City-owned parcel containing the Erasmus Hall High School to the south, and two privately-owned parcels to the west (Figures 1 and 2). Documentary research previously identified the site as potentially archaeologically sensitive as part of the Flatbush African Burial Ground, and prior archaeological work recovered a limited number of fragmented human remains (HPI 1998, 2000, 2001). Due to the site's continued potential sensitivity for human remains, the New York City Economic Development Corporation (NYCEDC), on behalf of the City, retained Historical Perspectives, Inc. (HPI) to develop a Community Engagement Plan and Unanticipated Discoveries Plan in 2019.

In late 2020, Mayor Bill de Blasio and City Council Member Mathieu Eugene announced plans to transform the site into affordable homes and a youth-focused community space. At this time (October, 2020), Brooklyn Borough President Eric Adams and City Council Member Mathieu Eugene convened and began to co-chair the Flatbush African Burial Ground Remembrance and Redevelopment (FABGRR) Task Force to work with NYCEDC, the New York City Department of Housing Preservation and Development (HPD), and the local community in building recommendations to guide memorialization of the site's history, proper treatment of any additional human remains, if discovered, and other aspects of the future development.

As part of these efforts, HPI was selected to undertake additional documentary research for the site, and participate in the identification of a Descendant Community. The Descendant Community, in the case of a former burial ground, should be consulted regarding any actions that may impact that burial ground or site. While this research study focused on identifying the people who were interred in the burial ground and their descendants ("lineal descendants"), and any descendant organizations as appropriate, the Descendant Community may also include people who self-identify as descendants such as people whose ancestors were part of the African diaspora. The FABGRR Task Force as a group are currently representing the Descendant Community, however, should additional descendants be identified in the future through the research effort noted in this report or otherwise in the future (either through continued research or self-identification) they too should be consulted, as is required for any actions that may impact burial grounds or sites.

All efforts for this current study were completed in winter 2020 and spring 2021 when many repositories were closed due to the Covid-19 pandemic. The following report presents the goals and results of HPI's efforts to further document the site history and identify the Descendant Community.

Project Background

The 2286 Church Avenue Site (aka the Bedford-Church Site) formerly contained the New York City landmarked (NYCL) late 19th century Flatbush School No. 1 building, which later became known as Public School (P.S.) 90 and subsequently the private school, Beth Rivka. The site was designated a NYCL in November 2007, however an emergency declaration requiring demolition of the school building was issued by the New York City Department of Buildings on September 18, 2015 due to unsafe conditions, and the structure was subsequently demolished. There are currently no structures on the site.

Historical and archaeological investigations of the project site before the school building was removed included a Preliminary Archaeological Assessment for the School Construction Authority (SCA) (HPI 1998), a Phase IA Archaeological Assessment Report (HPI 2000), and a Phase IB Field Investigation, which included an intensive level of documentary research focused on the burial ground (HPI 2001). The Phase IB Field Investigation discovered a small number of disarticulated human skeletal remains (human remains) in previously disturbed soil just south of Church Avenue to the east and west of the former P.S. 90 school building, including human teeth and fragments of a mandible (HPI 2001:15). The osteological analysis by physical anthropologists found the remains to represent two individuals (Ibid.:24-25). One of the teeth found with the mandible showed a minor degree of crenulation (enamel wrinkling), which at the time was thought to be associated with African ancestry (Ibid.:25) and has since been more definitively associated with Sub-Saharan African ancestry (Scheid and Weiss 2020:370; Scott et al. 2018:22). Osteological material was transferred by the SCA to Rev. Daniel Ramm, then minister of the Flatbush Reformed Church (previously the Flatbush Reformed Protestant Dutch Church or the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of Flatbush and herein referenced as the RPDCF), one block west of the project site, for reinterment in their consecrated cemetery since its ancestral church had once owned the burial ground and project site land. Conclusions from the Phase IB report were that the site could potentially yield more human remains and that it should either remain undisturbed or be subjected to further archaeological investigation.

The City is currently working with the community and the Task Force to build recommendations to guide memorialization of the site's history, proper treatment of any additional human remains if discovered, and other aspects of the future project. These recommendations will be incorporated into a Request for Proposals (RFP) to be issued by the City. The RFP will solicit proposals from development teams to build a mixed-use project with 100% affordable housing and a youth-focused community space on the project site. The prospective development team will be selected, in part, based on their ability to incorporate the community-guided recommendations of the Task Force into their proposal.

Research Questions

This Research Report has been guided by several main research and outreach questions:

1. What was the history of the Flatbush African Burial Ground, where exactly was it located, and what dates was it in use by the local community? This research incorporates and builds on the data gathered as part of the previous archaeological and historical studies.

2. Who were the people buried in the Flatbush African Burial Ground and can they be identified in historical records or by family members? This research also incorporates and builds on the data gathered as part of the previous archaeological and historical studies.
3. Who are the descendants of the people buried in the Flatbush African Burial Ground and how can they be identified and contacted? Which populations constitute the Descendant Community in Flatbush? Descendant communities may not necessarily be biological descendants of buried individuals, but rather groups representing the collective interests of such people.
4. Based on the results of the current work, what are the avenues for future research and outreach?

Methodology

The methodology employed to attempt to answer the research questions above included both archival research and community outreach. Over the course of the cultural resources work undertaken at this site by HPI beginning in 1998 and continuing through this study, materials were reviewed from a large number of local and state repositories, both in-person and using online resources. Research in 2020/2021 was conducted entirely online and by phone due to the Covid-19 global pandemic. The cumulative list of repositories searched is included in Appendix A.

Prior research (1998, 2000, 2001) was undertaken when many resources now readily available on the internet were not yet digitized (e.g., newspapers, deeds, maps), or were digitized but not indexed. Also, the former Brooklyn Historical Society, now part of the Center for Brooklyn History, was either closed for renovations or had critical primary sources (e.g., maps and surveys) out for digital scanning (2019) in preparation for uploading them for online access. Because of these changes in accessibility, new resources that were not previously available were reviewed for this study.

Several general categories of resources were reviewed from these archives. Historians and researchers differentiate between primary and secondary references that describe where a reference originated with no judgement as to its significance. By definition, primary documents include sources like diaries, tax records, survey maps, deeds, letters, manuscripts, interviews, eyewitness accounts, and some newspaper accounts - but only those witnessed by the writer. In contrast, secondary documents include sources like books, scholarly articles, and newspaper articles written by someone not directly involved with an event (i.e., a story was told to them). If the author of a newspaper experienced / witnessed the event, then it would fall into the category of primary source. The most reliable types of resources reviewed for this report and prior studies were primary sources. Primary sources from repositories are also included in Appendix A.

While primary records are the most reliable types of sources, records about enslaved people from the 18th and 19th centuries were scant, or often lacked personal information. This lack of records kept by Flatbush landowners reflects the gross imbalance in power at the time and was not due to poor record keeping by those that were enslaved. Those in power diminished the validity of those enslaved and often did not keep records relevant to their lives and deaths. Also, over time, some records were lost to fire, such as that experienced by the RPDCF, or other mishaps. Occasionally records that were lost or misplaced reappear at a future point in time, having been found in an unlikely location (e.g., someone's attic, or a repository in another state that does not realize what they have in their collection).

Archaeologist Elizabeth Meade's 2020 research into cemeteries in New York City succinctly summarized some of the reasons it is difficult to find primary records related to cemeteries for the enslaved, as well as identifying burial locations on the property of the enslavers:

Burial locations of enslaved Africans and free individuals of African descent were frequently excluded from property records, written histories, and other sources used to identify cemetery locations within New York City. As documented in [her] study, several historical homesteads or farms on which family cemeteries were preserved and protected for centuries are known to have had separate burial locations for the enslaved persons whose forced labor was used to maintain and operate working farms and households. These burial locations were often knowingly obliterated while the graves of individuals of European descent associated with the same homesteads and farms were relocated or preserved.

As Meade further stated, "one of the most potent reminders of the horrors of the enslavement of Africans and individuals of African descent in New York City's history is the lack of documentation of their burial places" (Meade 2020:119).

Secondary sources, which can be less precise, were also reviewed since these often provide information not available in the primary records. These generally included local histories from books, articles, pamphlets, and newspaper accounts. HPI also contacted and interviewed multiple local scholars, archaeologists, historians, community members, and church officials. Some websites were reviewed from other repositories across the United States, for cultural context. A full list of resources consulted, organizations that were contacted, and people interviewed, is included in Appendix A.

The community outreach component of this study entailed participating in a series of meetings with members of the FABGRR Task Force, that were facilitated by TYTHEdesign in winter-spring 2020/2021. Due to the Covid-19 pandemic, Task Force meetings were held virtually via Zoom and were livestreamed online on YouTube for the public to attend. The livestreamed videos, meeting notes and presentations were also posted to the project website. HPI served to inform the FABGRR Task Force of prior historic and archaeological research and results and provided monthly updates on continued research. HPI connected directly with Task Force members who expressed an interest in participating in research, whether now or in the future, and responded to community members outside of the Task Force who had an interest in contributing to research efforts. The project's ongoing community engagement process began with three virtual public community workshops held via Zoom on May 5th, May 22nd, and June 30th, where a presentation on the site's history and archaeological findings were presented. Question and answer sessions were held at each workshop where the community could ask questions about the site's history as well as connect with the project team to get more involved in the ongoing descendant research effort. All recordings from the three public workshops and Task Force meetings are posted onto the project website in addition to presentations and questions and answers. Through these efforts, community members were asked to provide feedback on how best to honor the sensitive history of the site in a future memorial and the sensitive handling of human remains, should they be discovered in the future.

In addition, HPI interviewed historians and archaeologists active in the metropolitan New York area, particularly those specializing in Kings County and enslaved African history. A list of contacts is included in Appendix A.

Research Results

The following section summarizes the results of the cumulative research for each of the research questions.

1. What was the history of the Flatbush African Burial Ground, where exactly was it located, and what dates was it in use by the local community?

An 1855 survey by T.E. Bergen depicted the outline of the cemetery as it existed at that time. Identified by archaeologist Meade in 2020 in the collection of the Center for Brooklyn History (formerly the Brooklyn Historical Society), a high-resolution copy was obtained from that repository (Figure 3). The 1855 survey was at an offsite facility for scanning and not available when the 2019 research was undertaken for the Community Engagement Plan. This is the only survey or map found to date that confirms that a cemetery was located at the intersection of Church and Bedford Avenues. Labeled as the “Negro Burying Ground” in 1855, at that time it measured 124.5 feet on the south, 61 feet on the west, 130.2 feet on the north, and approximately 26 feet on the east (Figure 3). It was then bounded on the south by land owned by the RPDCF, leased to Richard D. Van Kleek, to the west by the District School No. 1 lot (a portion of which the project site overlaps), to the north by Church Avenue (then the Road to New Lotts [sic]), and to the east by the town pound. Bedford Avenue had not yet been laid out across the burying ground, and Church Avenue was not in its current configuration but was instead narrow and angled northwest to southeast directly along the mapped northern boundary line of the burying ground.

In 2020, archaeologist Meade georeferenced the 1855 mapped boundaries of the cemetery onto the modern landscape using Geographic Information System (GIS) through a method called georeferencing. Georeferencing is the process of transforming a scanned map, survey, or aerial photograph so it appears “in place” on the current landscape. By associating features on the scanned image with real world locations (e.g., street corners, lot boundaries, roadways), GIS software can reconcile these images with modern maps with a fairly high degree of accuracy. The result of georeferencing confirmed that at least a portion of the burial ground as it was mapped in 1855 was located within the northeast corner of the project site.

Unfortunately, the 1855 survey did not elucidate what the burying ground lot looked like at the time the survey was completed, when the cemetery was established, or when it ceased being used for new burials. Nor did it appear to depict the full extent of the burying ground before 1855. Secondary sources and the results of archaeological testing indicate strongly that the burying ground was once larger and extended west beyond its 1855 mapped boundaries. When Flatbush Village School No. 1 was built in 1842 in the footprint of what is now Church Avenue immediately north of the project site and west of the 1855 mapped burying ground, human remains were reportedly encountered when excavations were undertaken for a basement (Stiles 1884:252; Snyder 1945:137; see Figure 4 for school location).

Writing in 1884, historian Stiles stated:

On the south side of Cow Lane, or East Broadway [now Church Avenue], about 60 feet east of Locust Street [now Bedford Avenue] was located the town pound. Its high board fence enclosed an area of about 40 square feet, extending almost half way across the street. Adjoining it was the colored people's burying ground, extending west about 100 feet, to a pond on the land now occupied by the public school and the building of the Flatbush Engine Company... When this property, then owned by the Reformed Church, was improved, and the street [Bedford Avenue] laid out in 1865, these relics of the old town were removed. The graves were opened and the remains removed to a new burying ground in another section of the Reformed Church land, at the northeast corner of the cemetery of the Holy Cross (1884:229).

Likewise, historian Snyder, writing in 1945, stated:

[In 1842] The plot of ground selected for the new schoolhouse had formerly been a burying place for colored people, who had served as slaves in the homes and fields of their Flatbush masters. While excavating for the cellar a large number of bones were brought to the surface all of which were gathered together and reinterred into what is now Holy Cross (1945:138).

These references strongly suggest that the burying ground continued west of its 1855 mapped boundary, which would place it in the northern end of the project site.

The RPDCF property that encompassed the burial ground was gradually reduced in size as sections were given away, paved over for roads, or sold off. As previously reported, an 1875 article stated that the “place where Mr. Van Dyke’s house stands was once a burying ground which was called the ‘colored burying ground’” (Kings County Rural Gazette 3/6/1875). A contemporaneous map (Beers 1873, Figure 6) placed the Van Dyke house at the southeast corner of the intersection of Church and Bedford Avenues. Although noted Brooklyn historians Stiles and Snyder referenced human remains having been found when a house was built near this intersection, they did not cite a source for this information, but it may well be the 1875 article (Stiles 1884:252; Snyder 1945:138). A thorough reading of the 1866 deed for the sale of the property adjoining “the District School Lot” conveyed by the RPDCF to Maria Van Dyke, wife of Abraham J. Van Dyke, found no reference to a burial ground or cemetery on the property, despite the fact that burials were reportedly found when the house foundation was excavated (Liber 724:524, 10/1/1866).

Further evidence of the obliterated cemetery was found in an 1890 news article that reported “workmen unearthed two skeletons near East Broadway [Church Avenue]” during excavations for a sewer in Bedford Avenue (Brooklyn Citizen 12/6/1890). They were reportedly reviewed by a Professor Andrew Whigham who determined they were the remains of a man and a woman, the site having once been a “colored cemetery” (Ibid.). Also, in 1904 a full skeleton was found during sewer excavations in Church Avenue near Bedford Avenue (Brooklyn Times Union 11/18/1904, The New York Press 11/19/1904).

HPI’s archaeological excavations in 2001 and the discovery of human remains at the north end of the project site adjacent to Church Avenue also supports this contention, although intact burial shafts were not found at that time (Figure 5). Instead, disarticulated human remains were found in a disturbed context.

Research to date has not revealed details about the full horizontal and vertical extent of the burying ground, what date it was initially established, or when interments ceased. Since the Dutch introduced slavery to the area in the early 17th century, it could be assumed that a burial ground for their interment – separate from the main RPDCF burying ground for those of European descent – may have been established at this early time. Alternatively, it could have been established later if early farmers that enslaved Africans instead buried the deceased in or near their small family burial plots. That is not to say that specific family burial plots have been revealed through research, but it was not an uncommon practice to establish such.

In 1835, the African Wesleyan Methodist Episcopal Church (AME)/Lincoln Cemetery was established in Flatbush, providing a new location for the burial of Flatbush’s residents of African ancestry. The AME Church, also called the “Church in the Woods,” was built between Flatbush and New Lots, far outside what was then considered Flatbush village (Strong 1842:107; Stiles 1884:245). The AME Church stood on the north side of Church Avenue, immediately west of what is now Kings Highway. The mapped boundaries of its associated cemetery extended north of Church Avenue from Kings Highway between what are now East 57th and East 58th Streets, to a point about halfway between Linden Boulevard and Lenox Road (Meade 2020). It was described as containing several acres, and what is now Linden Boulevard was laid out across it in the early 20th century (Brooklyn Daily Eagle 1/31/1907).

After 1835, the interment of Flatbush residents of African descent may have shifted to Lincoln Cemetery and then later possibly to Green-Wood Cemetery. Established in 1838 northwest of the village of Flatbush, Green-Wood Cemetery was one of the first rural cemeteries in the country and served the metropolitan New York area. As early as 1851, seven lots were specifically designated for the burial of people of African descent. Now preserved and renamed “The Freedom Lots,” a scan of interment lists found multiple deceased from Brooklyn and several from Flatbush buried in these lots from 1851 onward (Green-Wood Cemetery 2021). No earlier burials were recorded for these lots.

When the RPDCF deeded a portion of the African Burial Ground land to the Town of Flatbush for Village School No. 1 in 1842, it is not known if the cemetery was visually evident, had headstones present, or was demarcated by fencing. Unfortunately, records found to date do not clarify this.

2. Who were the people buried in the Flatbush African Burial Ground and can they be identified in historical records or by family members?

Research for this study focused on establishing a Descendent Community, and most specifically, attempting to identify individuals interred in the Flatbush African Burial Ground. To accomplish this, multiple resources were consulted and reviewed, including Flatbush Town Records, Board of Health Records, newspaper articles, obituaries, written histories, RPDCF records, and the New York Slavery Index maintained by John Jay College. To date, two definitive names of people interred at the Flatbush African Burial Ground were found, as described herein.

- 1) A review of published texts found a book about the former residents of the Zabriske Homestead that once stood a block west of the project site near Church and Flatbush Avenues (Schenck 1881). The book included the biography of a formerly enslaved woman named Sarah Hicks, who was reportedly born in the Zabriske homestead before the 1790s. About Sarah, Schenck wrote:

She remembers that during her youth the Indians “used to come round with baskets to sell”; that after the death of her twin sister she put cake and flowers in one of these baskets and took them to her sister's grave, which was in the burial-ground for colored people, which was situated in East Broadway, near the present public-school house. This burial-ground was abolished and the land sold for building purposes in the year 1861. (Schenck 1881:69).

Schenck did not state exactly when the burial ground was abolished – before or commensurate with the selling of land in 1861 - nor did he indicate the year that Sarah’s sister died. He later wrote that among the enslaved people born in the Zabriske homestead were six; four by the name of Jacobs and two Johnsons. “Among the Jacobses is she of whom we give a biographical sketch, under her married name of Sarah Hicks” (Schenck 1881:72). Hence, we are led to understand that Phyllis Jacobs, Sarah Hick’s sister, was interred in the Bedford and Church Avenue burial ground. He also estimated Sarah Hick’s birth year as 1785 (Ibid.: 70).

- 2) In 1810 the Long Island Star published the obituary of a woman of African descent named Eve. She was reportedly about 110 years old, having lived in Flatbush and dying in the house of “her last master, Lawrence Voorhes” (Long Island Star March 29, 1810). Described as a woman of strong intellectual capacity, upon her death she was “piously interred in the African burying Ground in the village of Flatbush” (Ibid.).

These two definitive burials as well as additional burials found with references to interment potentially in the Flatbush African Burial Ground are listed in Appendix B. Burials post-dating 1835, however, could instead be referencing the previously described AME Church/Lincoln Cemetery. Several burials listed in Appendix B were found at the website Findagrave.com and one reference was obtained from the Parish Records of St. Paul’s Church in Flatbush, formed in 1836. The references from Findagrave.com date to 1845 and 1875. The later date may be referencing the AME Church/Lincoln Cemetery since it appears that much, if not all, of the land for the Flatbush African Burial Ground had been divested by the RPDCF or subsumed into the street system by this time. Likewise, the sample of St. Paul’s Parish Records that were shared by Rev. Sheldon Hamblin recorded a member as “Black” and interred in the “Colored Burying Ground in Flatbush” in 1870 (see Appendix B). Given the late date, it also may be referencing the AME Church/Lincoln Cemetery. Continued research of the Parish Records may produce more names with similar references of interment.

Early Town of Flatbush records on microfilm at the New York City Municipal Archives reviewed in 2001 and reviewed online again for this study did not yield the names of enslaved or formerly enslaved people buried in the Flatbush African Burial Ground. However, they did include numerous recorded enslaved births, manumissions, and indentures in Flatbush (Old Town Kings Microfilm Rolls 17 and 127). New York State manumission laws, first enacted in 1799, required any child born to an enslaved woman after July 4, 1799, to be freed, but only after serving the “owner” of his or her mother until the age of 25 for women and 28 for men. As a result, Flatbush records are replete with the recordation of enslaved person births beginning in 1799, followed by manumission filings, and then indenture records (Old Town Kings Microfilm Roll 17:220 onward). While it is possible that the names of the enslaved people represent the population that would have been interred at the Flatbush African Burial Ground upon their later death, to date there has not been a way to confirm this.

Board of Health Records for Flatbush specifically cited payment to individuals for the burying of people of African descent, but not the location of those burials. In 1832, for example, the Board of Health paid Rem Hegeman for the taking of people to the “Burying Ground,” without reference to whom was taken or to which burying ground (Old Town Kings Microfilm Roll 17: 387). Also in 1832, the Board of Health paid William Allegro $21.37 for the “making of nine pine coffins for colored people” and William Stoothaff was paid $7.12 for making three coffins “for the blacks of Flatbush” (Ibid:389, 391). Additional transactions recorded in 1832 were for “digging a grave and burying a black man working at Mr. Clarksons” and “digging a grave and burying a black man who died at John C. Bergens,” with similar references, all lacking specific details about where the deceased were buried (Ibid: 395). These samples are a few of the many entries for expenses incurred related to burying people of African descent from 1832 onward, all without reference to where they were buried. However, since the Kings County Almshouse was erected in Flatbush in 1832, and it was overseen – in part - by the Flatbush Board of Health, these are likely references to burials in the cemetery on the Almshouse grounds.

Most of the early records of the RPDCF were lost in a fire, but available church baptism records (1677-1754) were reviewed for references to people of African descent that may have been buried in the Flatbush African Burial Ground (see Appendix C highlighted text). The following were the only three entries in the records to non-whites:

DATE	NAMES
1681, May 08	Swaan (Neger), Christina (Negrinne)
1754, Jun 16	Jacob and Sara (Negroes), Maria
1754, Nov 06	Negress of Jan van der Veer; Elysabet

Additional names of enslaved people in Flatbush were recorded in the New York Slavery Index maintained by John Jay College (Appendix D). Four enslaved people, all reportedly born prior to 1757, were recorded in documents with the following dates:

RECORD DATE	NAME
1777	Bet
1777	Betty
1778	Primus
1787	Will

If the above listed individuals remained in Flatbush for the duration of their lives, they may have been interred in the Flatbush African Burial Ground upon their deaths. However, currently no resources have been found to verify this.

- Who are the descendants of the people buried in the Flatbush African Burial Ground and how can they be identified and contacted? Which populations constitute the Descendant Community in Flatbush?

The kin, or biological relatives, of those buried in the Flatbush African Burial Ground have not yet been identified. To seek potential relatives of the two people known to have been buried there, Phyllis Jacobs and Eve, a post was uploaded to the Ancestry.com message board on April 7, 2021, and again on April 23, 2021, specifically seeking descendants of Flatbush’s enslaved population. The post reads:

Descendants of Enslaved Africans in Flatbush, Kings County (now Brooklyn), New York

Historical Perspectives, Inc. is seeking descendants of people who were enslaved in Flatbush, Kings County, New York (now part of Brooklyn) in the 17th through 19th centuries, and who might have been laid to rest in an African Burial Ground within the village of Flatbush. To date, two people have been identified as being interred there, a woman by the name of Phyllis Jacobs (pre1790-early 1800s), and Eve (no surname given, ca.1710-1810). This research supports the memorialization of the African Burial Ground's sacred history as part of the future development of a vacant, City-owned site at 2286 Church Avenue, at the intersection of Bedford and Church Avenues. Recent historical research and archaeological excavations contribute to evidence that the African Burial Ground once existed on or near this site. The Flatbush African Burial Ground Remembrance and Redevelopment Task Force was formed to guide memorialization of the African Burial Ground and gather community input about how the future 100% affordable housing and youth services development can best meet the Flatbush area's needs. Descendants who are interested in becoming part of the consultation process for memorialization of the site should respond with contact information. Thank you.

Another post was made with the same text, but with the headline highlighting Phyllis Jacobs, and a third was made highlighting her sister, Sarah Jacobs Hicks. Each post will remain active after this report is submitted; all responses to HPI will be forwarded to the project team through the FABGRR Task Force website as soon as they are received.

In addition, the Brooklyn Public Library was contacted on April 23, 2021, with the goal of posting a similar message on their website. As of the issuance of this report (July 2021) the administrators of the library were still in the process of determining the feasibility of adding it to their website.

The Community Engagement Plan prepared in 2019, and enacted in 2020 to present, has served to identify the non-biological Descendant Community of the colonial enslaved and freed Africans of early Flatbush through the formation of a community-based task force and ongoing community engagement to the general public. The FABGRR Task Force is co-chaired by Brooklyn Borough President Eric Adams and Council Member Mathieu Eugene and is made up of members of the Flatbush community representing a diverse set of interests and constituencies. A full list of Task Force members is available at the FABGRR Task Force website: <https://fabgtaskforce.nyc/the-project>. Providing historical context and relevant material to this group has been accomplished through Task Force meetings, and public community workshops, that took place as previously described, and through the dissemination of research updates coinciding with Task Force meetings, included in the Task Force meeting presentations and notes available at <https://fabgtaskforce.nyc/get-involved>. Ongoing research efforts by the FABGRR Task Force and other members of the Flatbush community can contribute to this essential effort.

4. Based on the results of the current work, what are the avenues for future research and outreach?

Databases of the Dutch families that enslaved people in Flatbush have been collected as part of this research effort (Appendix D). To compile a comprehensive list of all the names of those who were enslaved in Flatbush, with the very real possibility that many of these names represent the population interred at the Flatbush African Burial Ground, researching the probate records of the enslaving families could be pursued at the Kings County Surrogate's Court. If a family enslaved people, then records of purchase, sale, rent, mortgage, gift, lawsuits, etc., can often be found under the various listings related to probate.

Future research is suggested since new, unknown records periodically become available. Families may donate their historic diaries, bibles, and other ephemera to public research institutions, which may reveal the names of biological kin or elucidate the beginning and end dates for burial ground use. Attempts to find additional information about the burial ground whether by volunteer researchers or paid consultants, should be completed in tandem with the FAGBRR Task Force and/or Descendant Community. Primary records at the Center for Brooklyn History, the Kings County Clerk's Office, whose records room was closed to researchers during the Covid-19 pandemic, and similar repositories focused on Flatbush, Kings County, the enslaved population, and cemeteries should be revisited on a regular basis if feasible.

In addition, the Parish Records at St. Paul's Church that were not reviewed in depth for this study due to concerns about Covid-19, should continue to be reviewed to collect the names of members listed as Black and having been interred in the African Burial Ground. There may be earlier records than the 1870 sample entry scanned and shared by Rev. Hamblin since the church was formed in 1836. This work would need to be coordinated with Rev. Hamblin, and all collected information should be shared with the FAGBRR Task Force and/or Descendant Community.

When the Center for Brooklyn History is reopened for research, the Block Abstracts within the Land Conveyances Collection should be reviewed for information pertaining to the block where much of the Flatbush African Burial Ground was mapped immediately east of Bedford Avenue, Block 5104, focusing on Lots 6, 10, 12, and 18 on the north half of the block. It may be that records for these lots refer to the Flatbush African Burial Ground despite the fact the records for Block 5103, where the project site is located, did not. The conveyances may cite specific deeds that can be reviewed. However, as previously noted, the 1866 deed between the RPDCF and Van Dyke for a lot on that block had no reference to a burial ground or cemetery on the property. Further, the recorded RPDCF deeds found through a search of the New York Land Records revealed dozens of deeds with multiple variations on the church name (Appendix E). Deeds predating 1847 were already reviewed and did not mention the cemetery, but it is worth looking at later deeds and those with no date indicated.

If research finds the names of additional people interred in the burial ground, new posts should be made on Ancestry.com, and/or other social media sites to seek biological kin so that they can be invited to join the Descendant Community. Regardless, the FAGBRR Task Force or other engaged members of the community should consider continuing to pursue avenues of research meaningful to the remembrance and memorialization of the site.

Conclusions and Recommendations

There is no doubt that at some point after the Dutch arrived in the 17th century, the Flatbush African Burial Ground was established at what is now the corner of Church and Bedford Avenues, and that it was actively used for burials through at least 1810, and possibly through the early 1840s when a portion west of its 1855 mapped boundary appears to have been given to the Village of Flatbush to establish a public school. Early Flatbush historical records with reference to the enslaved population are minimal, and most documents in which enslaved people were referenced describe their transfer between one enslaver and another. Ascertaining the specific names of people buried in the cemetery has been hindered by the lack of records specifically referencing their interment.

HPI recommends that research into the interred population continue, with the goal of creating a database of the names of the enslaved people of Flatbush from the 17th century through the early 1840s, if the FABGRR Task Force and/or Descendant Community consider this a worthwhile endeavor. With the exception of Phyllis Jacobs, research into the enslaved population thus far has revealed first names only, and this may be the case as work continues. Without surnames, finding the potential descendants of the enslaved population may prove to be challenging.

Future goals established by the FABGRR Task Force and/or Descendant Community should continue to be supported by the City as feasible, and the site should be memorialized accordingly.
