TESTIMONY AT THE PUBLIC HEARING

On March 22, 2011, the Landmarks Preservation Commission held a public hearing on the proposed designation of the Central Ridgewood Historic District (Item No. 5). The hearing was duly advertised according to the provisions of law. Six witnesses spoke in favor of the designation, including a representative of Councilmember Diana Reyna, as well as representatives of the Ridgewood Property Owners and Civic Association, the Historic Districts Council, the Central Queens Historical Association, the Queens Preservation Council, and the New York Landmarks Conservancy. Three speakers expressed concerns about the proposed designation. In addition, the Commission received four letters in support of designation, including correspondence from Councilmember Elizabeth S. Crowley, Councilmember Antonio Reynoso, and the Ridgewood Local Development Corporation, two e-mail communications in support of designation, and one in opposition.

CENTRAL RIDGEWOOD HISTORIC DISTRICT BOUNDARIES

The Central Ridgewood Historic District in the Borough of Queens consists of the properties bounded by a line beginning at the northwest corner of Fresh Pond Road and 71st Avenue, then extending westerly along the northern curbline of 71st Avenue to a point in said curbline formed by its intersection with a line extending northerly from the eastern property line of 60-84 71st Avenue, southerly across 71st Avenue and along said property line, westerly along the southern property lines of 60-84 to 60-56 71st Avenue, across 60th Lane and continuing westerly along the southern property lines of 60-50 to 60-34 71st Avenue, northerly along a portion of the western property line of 60-34 71st Avenue, westerly along the southern property lines of 60-32 to 60-20 71st Avenue, northerly along the western property line of 60-20 71st Avenue and across 71st Avenue to its northern curbline, westerly along said curbline, northerly along the western property line of 59-11 71st Avenue, easterly along the northern property line of 59-11 71st Avenue and a portion of the northern property line of 59-13 71st Avenue, northerly along the western property line of 59-22 70th Avenue and across 70th Avenue to its northern curbline, westerly along said curbline, continuing across Forest Avenue to the northeast corner of 70th Avenue and Onderdonk Avenue, northerly along the eastern curbline of Onderdonk Avenue, easterly along the southern curbline of Catalpa Avenue to the southeast corner of Catalpa Avenue and Forest Avenue, northerly across Catalpa Avenue and along the eastern curbline of Forest Avenue, easterly along the northern property lines of 59-01 to 59-11 Catalpa Avenue, northerly along the western property line of 59-14 68th Road and across 68th Road to its northern curbline, westerly along said curbline, northerly along the western property line of 59-13 68th Road, easterly along a portion of the northern property line of 59-13 68th Road, northerly along the western property line of 59-12 68th Avenue to the southern curbline of 68th Avenue, easterly along said curbline, southerly along the western curbline of 60th Street, westerly along

SUMMARY

The Central Ridgewood Historic District is significant as an intact grouping of approximately 990 buildings and sites, most of which are brick row houses, representing one of the most harmonious, and architecturally-distinguished enclaves of working-class dwellings built in New York City during the early twentieth century. The historic district is located near the previously-designated Ridgewood South and Ridgewood North Historic Districts, which are comprised mainly of small apartment houses. Most of the houses in the Central Ridgewood Historic District were constructed between 1906 and the First World War by German-Americans and immigrants from Germany. Most of the block fronts consist of houses with projecting bays, and were produced by the architectural firm Louis Berger & Company and a small group of local builders. In addition, most of the bricks used in their construction came from the Kreischer Brick Manufacturing Company of Staten Island. The district exhibits a high level of integrity and retains the ambience that has distinguished it since its development in the early twentieth century.

Transportation improvements and the consolidation of Greater New York City contributed to the development of Ridgewood, which had been characterized by open farmland and several amusement parks in the 19th century. Denser building activity began with the coming of the electric trolley in 1894, and after 1898, Ridgewood's rural character was overtaken by the eastward expansion of a growing New York City. Located adjacent to Brooklyn's Eastern District (which contained the modern communities of Bushwick, Williamsburg and Greenpoint), Ridgewood became an ideal location for upwardly mobile German-Americans to relocate, away from the over-crowded conditions found in Bushwick, Williamsburg, and the Lower East Side. Urbanization accelerated with the opening of the elevated train around the turn of the century. Providing rapid and dependable rail service, the "El" was extended from its original terminus at Myrtle and Wyckoff Avenues to Fresh Pond Road and 67th Avenue in 1915.

Louis Berger & Company was the architect of record for over 5,000 buildings in the Ridgewood-Bushwick area between 1895 and 1930. Born in 1875 in Rheinpfalz, Germany, Berger studied architecture at Pratt Institute in Brooklyn and served as an apprentice with the firm Carrere & Hastings before establishing his own business in Bushwick in 1895. Paul Stier, Ridgewood's biggest builder, built over 2,000 houses in the area, including about half of the houses in the Central Ridgewood Historic District.

Most of the houses in the district were built after 1905 when the fire codes requiring masonry construction for attached rows were extended into Ridgewood. The brick buildings in the historic district have load-bearing masonry walls constructed of red-, buff-, amber- and brown-colored Kreischer brick used in various combination from houses to house or row to row. The buildings have fine detailing, mainly in the Renaissance Revival Style, often mixed with elements from other styles, such as Romanesque Revival and neo-Grec. Significant features include cast-stone lintels, door surrounds, pediments, and string courses, as well as pressed metal cornices decorated with brackets, dentils, and swags. Many of the original brownstone stoops, cut-glass and wood doors, and iron fences, railings, and gates remain intact, as do most of the pressed-metal cornices. Many corner buildings were built with commercial storefronts at the first floors, most of which have been altered. Representing a cohesive collection of speculative urban architecture, the row houses in the Central Ridgewood Historic District retain a high level of architectural integrity and represent an important part of the development of housing in New York City.

THE HISTORICAL AND ARCHITECTURAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE CENTRAL RIDGEWOOD HISTORIC DISTRICT

History of Ridgewood, Queens¹

Located in western Queens County, Ridgewood² originally spanned the Brooklyn-Queens border, an area that was inhabited by the Mespachtes Indians prior to being settled by Europeans. The high, thickly wooded terrain is part of the terminal moraine that runs through Ridgewood and continues east through the center of Long Island. Part of Ridgewood was located in the Brooklyn town of Bushwick, one of the original six towns that joined together to become the City of Brooklyn in 1854, while another section was part of the adjacent town of Newtown, one of the original three towns of Queens County.

During the 17th and 18th centuries, farms in Ridgewood were tilled by Dutch and British families, who grew lettuce, corn, potatoes, cauliflower, and a variety of fruits for urban markets in Brooklyn and Manhattan. The only-known Dutch farmhouse surviving in Ridgewood is the Adrian and Ann Wyckoff Onderdonk House (third quarter of the 18th century, a designated New York City Landmark). At the start of the American Revolution, Ridgewood remained mostly farmland, along with a small burial ground. During this period and for some time thereafter, many of the farms held slaves.³

In the mid-19th century, the Bushwick area, just to the west of Ridgewood, began to lose its rural, agricultural landscape. Large numbers of Germans were immigrating to New York following the political upheavals in central Europe in 1848 and many of them settled in Williamsburg and Bushwick (collectively with Greenpoint known as Brooklyn's Eastern District) and began the development of the area's most prominent industry, brewing. Owned mainly by German immigrants, the breweries employed a largely German workforce, whose families also provided a sufficient local demand for lager beer. By 1880, 35 breweries had been established in Brooklyn, including at least 11

² The Ridgewood area was named for the nearby Ridgewood Reservoir, built in 1856-59 by the City of Brooklyn. Located on the wooded glacial ridge formed by the Long Island terminal moraine, the reservoir was located in the present-day Highland Park on the south side of Ridgewood.

Development in the Bushwick area was spurred by continuous improvements in transportation, including horse cars, cable lines and railroads. Tenements and small row houses were built.⁴ Development, consisting primarily of three- and four-story multiple dwellings, spread eastward toward the Brooklyn-Queens border during the following decades. A number of picnic grounds, beer gardens, amusement parks, and racetracks opened amidst Ridgewood’s fields and farming villages towards the end of the 19th century, catering especially to the large German population of Bushwick.

Located to the east of Bushwick, Ridgewood remained largely rural until after the consolidation of the City of New York in 1898, just as the last vacant land in Bushwick was being developed. Myrtle and Metropolitan Avenues and Fresh Pond Road are among the oldest streets in Ridgewood, having originally been Native American trails and then used by Long Island farmers to take their products to market. Stagecoaches and horse cars ran along Myrtle Avenue to Jamaica Avenue. The first railroad to reach the area, in 1878, was the New York Connecting Railroad Extension (once the Manhattan Beach Railroad), running from Brooklyn through Ridgewood to the Brooklyn seashore. In 1881, the Bushwick Railroad Company secured a right of way through several Ridgewood farms, and began operating steam service from Wyckoff and Myrtle Avenue to Lutheran Cemetery. The elevated rapid transit line ran to Wyckoff Avenue along the Brooklyn/Queens border beginning in 1888⁵ and an extension of the electrified trolley ran from Bushwick to Fresh Pond Road in Ridgewood in 1894. The Myrtle Avenue line was extended at grade over the private right-of-way of the former Lutheran line from Wyckoff Avenue to Lutheran Cemetery in 1904.⁶

By the turn of the century, Bushwick’s builders began purchasing Ridgewood’s farms, parks, and racetracks. Over the next two decades, they constructed tenements and small row houses similar to those they had built for the German immigrant workers and their families in Bushwick.⁷ The Ridgewood Board of Trade was organized in 1902 by local businessmen, many of whom were of German descent; these men developed plans for civic improvements, including parks, sidewalks, sewers, road paving and street lamps, as well as for additional transportation enhancements. The opening of the Queensboro Bridge in 1909 further contributed to the development of the area, linking the roadways

of Queens to Manhattan. An article in the *Real Estate Record and Guide*⁸ published in late 1909 mentions that an area of over 150 blocks of former farmland and picnic parks in Ridgewood was experiencing intense growth.⁹

From the turn of the century to World War I, more than 5,000 structures were built in Ridgewood; industrial areas developed to the north, while residential construction occurred in the southern section.¹⁰ The developers built wood-frame houses until 1905, when building codes took effect requiring masonry construction. All subsequent construction in Bushwick and Ridgewood, including within the Central Ridgewood Historic District, was of masonry. Many of the builders hired the architectural firm of Louis Berger & Company to design their rows, which were faced largely with bricks produced by the Kreischer Brick Manufacturing Company. Thus, many of Ridgewood's buildings share similar designs, brickwork, and ornamentation.

Building activity was curtailed during World War I, resuming at a slower pace following the war, continuing until the last Ridgewood farms were developed in the 1930s. Additional row houses were constructed, along with attached and semi-detached single- and multi-family houses often with driveways and garages.

German Immigration in New York City, Brooklyn's Eastern District and Ridgewood¹¹

From its founding in 1626 by Peter Minuit, a native of the German town of Wesel am Rhein, New York City has had a significant German population. During the 1820s, the first German neighborhood and commercial center developed in the area southeast of City Hall Park. By 1840 more than 24,000 Germans lived in the city. During the next twenty years, their numbers increased dramatically as "mass transatlantic migration brought another hundred thousand Germans fleeing land shortages, unemployment, famine, and political and religious oppression,"¹² with over 1,350,000 immigrating to the United States. To accommodate this growth, new German neighborhoods or "Little Germanys," also known individually as "Dutchtown," developed, including Kleindeutschland, east of the Bowery and north of Division Street in Manhattan and,

⁸ "Growth of Queens," Real Estate Record and Guide (December 25, 1909), 1200, as cited in LPC. Stockholm Street Historic District Designation Report (LP-2081), report prepared by Donald G. Presa (New York: City of New York, 2000). Between 1906 and 1912, Ridgewood regularly led Queens in the number of new buildings permits issued each month by the Bureau of Buildings. ("Queens Building Activity," NYT, June. 3, 1906, 17; RERG, Mar. 16, 1912, 546).

⁹ A year later, the New York Times reported that Ridgewood in Queens and other nearby areas had "...developed so rapidly and solidly that they seem to be a continuation of Brooklyn." ("The Recent Growth of Long Island," NYT, Oct, 23, 1910, RE3).

outside the city, in the Eastern District of Brooklyn (Williamsburg, Bushwick and Greenpoint). By 1860, Germans in New York City numbered more than 200,000, accounting for one quarter of the city's total population. They represented the first large immigrant community in American history that spoke a foreign language. In the 1870s and 1880s, dislocations caused by the growth of the German Empire brought more new immigrants to the United States while thousands of American-born children of German immigrants established their own homes in these neighborhoods.¹³ Germans established new neighborhoods in Yorkville in Manhattan and Steinway in Queens, and existing German neighborhoods expanded, such as Williamsburg and Bushwick. New York City's German population increased in the 1890s, reaching a peak of over 700,000 in 1900. After that, many Germans and German-Americans migrated to suburban areas outside of New York City, resulting in the reduction of the city's German population to fewer 90,000 by 1920. During the same period, many of the Germans that remained in New York moved from older neighborhoods in Manhattan and Brooklyn to newly developing areas like Ridgewood, Queens. The Real Estate Record and Guide reported in 1913 that, for several years, German families in large numbers had been moving to Ridgewood from Manhattan, the Bronx, and Brooklyn, especially from the Williamsburgh area.¹⁴ New York City's German population grew again during the 1920s as many Germans fled economic and political turmoil in Europe.

Immigrants from Germany and their descendants have contributed greatly to New York City's culture in areas such as religion, politics, business, labor, publishing, the arts, philanthropy, and local cuisine. By settling in areas with such a high concentration of fellow countrymen, it was easy for the Germans to maintain their culture and customs, which included German-speaking churches and synagogues, German newspapers, singing societies, Turnverein,¹⁵ and beer gardens. Many of the city's breweries were established by Germans, who also operated hundreds of beer halls and wine gardens in German neighborhoods, especially in Brooklyn's Eastern District. Germans were also well-represented in the building trades, including in the practice of architecture,¹⁶ and created their own banking, savings, and loan institutions. Several publishing houses and newspapers were owned by German New Yorkers, including the popular Staats-Zeitung.

¹³ By 1880, the city's German population constituted about one third of the city's total.

¹⁴ "Opportunities in Ridgewood," RERG, Oct. 18, 1913, 703.

¹⁵ A Turnverein is a German gymnastics society based on the teachings of Prussian nationalist, Friedrich Ludwig Jahn. In America, especially in cities where large German populations settled, "the principal German organizations, other than the churches, for maintaining cultural and social traditions were the singing and gymnastics societies known respectively as the "Gensang Vereins" and the "Turn Vereins" (Gesang = singing; turn = gymnastics; verein = club or society) established not long after the arrival of the first significant numbers of Germans in the late 1840s and early 1850s." (Robert L. Dyer, "The Boonville Turner" from Boonville an Illustrated History, available on-line (3/5/08) at: <http://www.undata.com/turnerhall/thhist.htm>.) ¹⁶ German-born architects working in New York included William Schickel (1850-1907), Detlef Lienau (1818-87), Leopold Eidlitz (1823-1908), Alexander Saeltzer (date undetermined), Alfred Zucker (b.1852), and Louis Allmendinger (1878-1937), who designed the well-known "Mathews Flats" model tenements, many of which are found in the previously-designated Ridgewood North and Ridgewood South Historic Districts.

While German singing societies and choral groups were generally identified with the middle and working classes, German musicians predominated in the New York Philharmonic and provided it with many of its directors, including Leopold Damrosch. In Ridgewood, German-American social organizations represented in the early- and mid-20th century included the First German Sports Club, the Schwaebischer Saengerbund, the Steuben Society of America, the Rheinpfaelzer Volkfest Vereins, the German-American School Association, and the Gottscheer Gedenksette.¹⁷

The History of Low-Cost Housing in New York¹⁸

By the middle of the 19th century, New York had developed into a world metropolis. Restricted by geography and by the lack of affordable transit, its burgeoning worker population crowded into a few wards in Lower Manhattan near the major centers of employment. At first, the need for low-cost housing was met by partitioning existing row houses into one- and two- room units. By the 1840s, builders began erecting the city's first tenements. About fifty feet deep, these four and five-story buildings were arranged in a double line of rooms with windowless bedrooms and stairs at the center of the building. Larger buildings, known as double-deckers or railroad flats, began appearing in the 1860s. These occupied as much as 90% of a standard 25 x 100 foot lot, and had twelve to sixteen rooms per floor, only four of which (two front, two back) had direct access to light and air.

Living conditions were overcrowded and unsanitary in all these buildings. Plumbing remained inadequate: water rarely reached above the first floor and was often only available from a tap in the yard; sewers and privies frequently overflowed, making these shared facilities unusable. Construction was flimsy and highly flammable; fires were a frequent occurrence. Under these conditions such infectious diseases as cholera, diphtheria, and typhus were rampant. While some medical experts believed that infection could be linked to specific bacteria, most subscribed to the popular notion that unsanitary conditions were the chief source of disease. Many social commentators also believed that bad housing contributed to the social degradation that led to crime, delinquency, pauperism, alcoholism, and prostitution.

While the working poor were being crowded into tenement buildings, the rapidly increasing population was also displacing the middle class, who were priced out of the New York City housing market by the second half of the 19th century. By 1866, those who could not afford their own houses included “professional men, clergymen, shopkeepers, artists, college professors, and upper-level mechanics.”¹⁹ Some middle-class families adapted by moving into boarding houses, but living with other families in a subdivided former row house conflicted with the era’s middle-class values, which stressed the “individual private house as the protector of family privacy, morality, and identity.”²⁰ In the years following the Civil War, new types of multiple dwellings emerged to cater to those of greater means than the poor or working-class.

¹⁷ The Gottscheers were Austrians who emigrated to the Balkans in the fourteenth century. In the 1880s, many Gottscheers, fleeing upheaval in the Balkans, moved to the United States and were among those who later settled in the developing neighborhood of Ridgewood in the early 20th century. During the World War II era, Gottscheers were again forced to flee Yugoslavia; the largest number of these refugees - about 3,000 - settled in Ridgewood, Queens.

Among New York’s first apartment houses were two designed by Richard Morris Hunt: the Stuyvesant Apartments (1869-70, demolished) at 142 East 18th Street, and Stevens House (1870-72, demolished), on the south side of 27th Street between Fifth Avenue and Broadway. (As opposed to tenements, in which residents shared toilets, both flats buildings and apartment houses had self-contained suites of rooms; the latter term generally referred to the more luxurious buildings, particularly those with elevators.) Between 1875 and 1879, approximately 700 new flats buildings were erected in New York; 516 were built in 1880 alone. A “revolution in living,” as the New York Times deemed it in 1878, was occurring, and by the mid-1880s, more New Yorkers lived in multiple dwellings than in roughhouses.

For those unable to afford a private home and willing to live outside of Manhattan, the two-family house presented an alternative to the rented flat. Two-family houses had taken root in newly developing areas of Brooklyn by 1895, with affordability accounting for much of the house type’s appeal. A typical 1898 advertisement for a two-family house of Brooklyn described the house as “self-supporting ... rent of upper floors pays all expenses.”²¹ Its main appeal was affordability; owners could occupy the first floor while renting out the upper story to help cover the house’s mortgage and other expenses. There were other advantages as well, according to the Brooklyn Eagle, which explained that two-family houses were “particularly attractive to people who desire comparatively small apartments, but who object to living in flats, and they appeal to this class on account of their being more quiet, and possibly, more exclusive.”²² They were also attractive to developers, as they could be built quickly and easily; differing little from traditional single-family row houses, they were exempt from the city’s tenement regulations, which only applied to dwellings housing three families or more. In Brooklyn, two-family houses generally resembled single-family row houses, except that they tended to be two, rather than three stories high. Both families entered through the same first-floor entrance and passed through a vestibule before entering a hallway with stairs to the second floor; each floor had a parlor, dining room, bathroom, one or two bedrooms, and a kitchen, although in some cases, the owner’s kitchen was located in the basement.²³

Thousands of two-family houses were built in the Ridgewood area in the early 20th century, making Ridgewood one of prime destinations for working-class families seeking an affordable path to home ownership.²⁴

Development of the Central Ridgewood Historic District²⁵

The development of the Central Ridgewood Historic District coincided with the building boom that was taking place in Queens County at the time, and more particularly in the greater Ridgewood area.²⁶ Numerous articles in the Ridgewood Times and other periodicals addressed the area's rapid development during the first two decades of the 20th century. According to the Real Estate Record and Guide,²⁷ most development consisted of two- and three-story brick houses and tenements selling for $9,000 to $17,000, depending on size and location.²⁸ Most of the houses were sold by builders to private owners, who lived in one of the apartments and rented the others for income.

The cohesive architectural environment of the Central Ridgewood Historic District is the notable result of the cooperation of a small group of builders, architects, and materials suppliers, almost all of whom were of German ancestry. One architectural firm, Louis Berger & Company, produced the overwhelming majority of blueprints for the houses, and the Kreischer Brick Company of Staten Island provided most of the brick. As a result, most of the rows have uniform setbacks, a consistent scale, and similar appearance. The historic district is especially distinguished by the frequent use of full-height projecting bays that create a rhythmic effect that relieves the horizontality of long rows of similar buildings.

Farms and Early Developments

The order of development of the Central Ridgewood Historic District was greatly influenced by the gradual division and sale of the farms. According to the late 18th and early 19th century records, land in the area that now includes the Central Ridgewood Historic District was divided among several owners, all from prominent early New York families, such as the Wyckoffs, Duryeas, Woodards, and Debevoises. These landowners rented sections of their land to farmers who grew produce for local consumption. Later in

²⁴ A number of rows in Ridgewood were developed as three-family houses, which provided homeowners with additional income.

²⁶ In many instances, rows of houses were built along streets in Queens that had yet to be officially opened and improved with sewers, grading, pavements, etc. By 1907, there were over 300 mapped, but unimproved, streets in the Ridgewood area. These delays were due to the intense development occurring in Queens at the time, which outpaced the city's ability to carry out improvements on newly-opened streets. the century, they began to sell parcels of their properties in sections of varying sizes to both farmers and land speculators. A complete street grid, called the Newtown plan, was laid out by the Topographical Bureau in 1899, covering the towns, villages and settlements in central Queens.²⁹

The Debevoise family, which owned most of the land that now comprises the Central Ridgewood Historic District, is descended from Carel de Beauvois, a French protestant (Huguenot) who first immigrated to Leyden, Holland and then to New Amsterdam in 1659. Highly respected and well-educated, de Beauvois served as a teacher, and later “‘chorister, reader and schoolmaster’ for the people of Brooklyn,” due to his knowledge of the Dutch language. De Beauvois’ grandson, Carel Debevoise, was the first in the family to arrive in Queens, purchasing land in Newtown in 1702. His son, also Carel Debevoise, settled in Bushwick in 1736. Versions of the name include also include De Bevoise and De Be Voise.³⁰

In 1847, another farmer, George Hulst, rented from the Debevoise family a portion land that includes the section of the Central Ridgewood Historic District located approximately to the north of Catalpa Avenue up to Putnam Avenue; Hulst purchased it outright from the Debevoises in 1851.³¹ Originally from Williamsburgh, George Hulst³² (1811-1902), was the son of Sarah Duryea and Anthony Hulst, who “‘was owner of the largest farm in Brooklyn at one time.”³³ In the 1860s, Hulst began to sell off lots in the west side of his over-65-acre Ridgewood estate, but the family retained ownership of much of the land east of present-day 60th Lane into the first decade of the 20th century. As a result, some of the oldest standing houses in the neighborhood, a number of which are included within the historic district, are located in the area near Forest Avenue. All of these houses have been drastically altered and retain very little or no visible historic fabric on the exterior.

Probably the oldest extant house in the historic district, 59-15 Catalpa Avenue appears to have been built between 1866 and 1873, possibly for J. Jarvis. This frame farm house is two stories with a below grade basement and an attic beneath a gabled roof. The house, which has been significantly modified and added to, retains its historic wood

The early wood-frame row houses in the district, as typified by 60-03 and 60-05 Putnam Avenue, were built in the late 19th century in the popular architectural styles of the period, usually Neo-Grec and Queen Anne, but have been stripped of their ornamentation and re-clad in a variety of non-historic sidings. The most interesting of the early wood-frame houses are at 1 and 2 Kleupfel Court. These mid-nineteenth century houses with gabled roofs were moved in 1913 to their current locations from the adjacent lots at 66-85 and 66-91 60th Place, which were redeveloped with brick apartment houses. Both of these houses have been altered.

Another farmer, Joachim Meyerrose, purchased nine acres of property, located north of Putnam Avenue, from Debevoise in 1854. Born in Bremen, Joachim Meyerrose³⁴ (whose name is sometimes spelled Meirose or Meyerose), who settled in Newtown in 1844, worked on the Debevoise farm before making his purchase. Ten years later, he greatly enlarged his farm by purchasing additional land west of Forest Avenue from the Woodard estate, including the two-block section of the Central Ridgewood Historic District bounded by Forest Avenue, Catalpa Avenue, Onderdonk Avenue, and 70th Avenue. Meyerrose and his sons worked the land into the last quarter of the 19th century. His older son Richard left farming to open a hay and grain market, while Joseph Meyerrose (b.1859) continued to operate the farm after his father's retirement, expanding the operation by renting adjacent property. Around the turn of the century, Meyerrose began selling off parts of the farm to local builders who constructed rows of brick houses over the next several years. In 1906, Meyerrose built a large brick house at what is now 66-75 Forest Avenue (Illustration 1) at the corner of Putnam Avenue to replace the family's original farmhouse which was being demolished for development. The new house, which was designed by Louis Berger & Company, is located within the historic district. Joseph Meyerrose remained a prominent figure in the politics of Ridgewood and Queens for more than 35 years, having been elected Queens County Sheriff in 1903. The family's Forest Avenue home originally occupied a large 200 by 200 foot parcel of land. Within a few years, however, Meyerrose began to develop more of the property, beginning with a house at 66-73 Forest Avenue, that is similar in appearance to his mansion. Later, he built three small rows of buildings at 66-63 to 66-69 Forest (1914) and 59-12 to 59-16 Madison Street (1913) and 59-13 to 59-19 Putnam Avenue (1914). Meyerrose used Louis Berger & Company to design all of these buildings. Meyerrose continued to occupy the Forest Avenue house until at least 1920. In 1922, the Meyerrose family sold the family house to the Queens Labor Lyceum, which constructed a masonry addition, containing a social hall, at the rear of the lot.³⁵

The earliest masonry rows found in the Central Ridgewood Historic District are found in the northern part of the district on the former Hulst and Meyerrose farms, which were the first to open up to development. These rows, which were built in 1906, just after the building laws prohibiting wood construction in this area came into effect, include the two-story tenements at 60-23 to 60-31 68th Avenue and the two-family houses at 60-23 to 60-35 67th Avenue (Illustration 2). Built by Ignatz Martin from designs by Louis Berger & Company, the rows are very similar in appearance, featuring flat-fronted facades with brownstone stoops, rough-faced, splayed window lintels (round-arch at the second stories) with projecting keystones, molded and bracketed cast-iron lintels at the entryways, rough-faced stone bands, and bracketed pressed-metal cornices decorated with modillions and swags.

Other early brick rows, all of which are found on the former Meyerrose farm, include 59-22 to 59-30 Madison Street (1907; John Eisenhauer, builder), 59-34 to 59-48 Madison Street (1907; Anton Kluepfel, builder); 60-02 to 60-12 Putnam Avenue (1907; Ignatz Martin, builder), and 60-35 to 60-41 Putnam Avenue (1907; Geier & Frey, builders). All designed by Louis Berger & Company, these rows are similar in appearance to, but somewhat simpler than, those that the firm designed in 1906 for Martin. All of the window lintels and stone bands in the later rows are flat, smooth, and flush.

Paul Stier, Builder, and Louis Berger & Company, Architects

The section of the Central Ridgewood Historic District south of Catalpa Avenue and east of Forest Avenue was part of a large farm tract straddling Myrtle Avenue that the Debevoise family sold off to investors and speculators, such as the D.M. Chauncey Real Estate Company, the William P. Roe Co., and the Ring-Gibson Company, around the turn of the century. A large part of the former Debevoise farm, located north of Myrtle Avenue between the present-day 60th Street and Fresh Pond Road, was acquired in 1906 by Paul Stier, who began intense development of the area in 1907.³⁶ Stier was overall the most prolific builder of houses within the district, having erected about half of the row houses. His most active years were from 1907 to 1909, when he built 392 of the 481 buildings that he eventually developed within the historic district.³⁷ Stier, who was born in Mecklenberg, Germany, in 1874, immigrated alone as a teenager to America in 1891. He first stayed with relatives in Buffalo, where he worked as a mason's apprentice. In 1902, he moved to the Ridgewood area, where he began building brick row houses by the score, quickly becoming the largest single developer in Ridgewood and one of the biggest building operators in New York City. A small street in the historic district is named Stier Place.

All of Stier's buildings were designed by or attributed to the architectural firm Louis Berger & Company, which produced the plans for the overwhelming majority of Lyceum closed in 1975 and building was converted to a small knitting mill. (National Register of Historic Places, Joseph Meyerrose House Nomination Form (Washington, D.C., 1993), report prepared by Donald G. Presa).

³⁶ In 1909, Stier nearly doubled the size of his development by acquiring a large section of the adjacent Hulst family farm located north of Catalpa Avenue between the present day 60th Lane and Fresh Pond Road.

³⁷ From 1910 forward, his developments were in partnership with August Bauer.

buildings within the Central Ridgewood Historic District.³⁸ Overall, Berger was known to have been the architect of record for over 5,000 buildings in Ridgewood and Bushwick between 1895 and 1930. Born in 1875 in Rheinpfalz, Germany, Berger immigrated to America as a young boy in 1880 and settled in Ridgewood in 1892. He studied architecture at Pratt Institute in Brooklyn and served as an apprentice with the firm Carrere & Hastings before establishing his own firm in Bushwick in 1895. His specialty was the design of tenement houses and in the laws governing their construction. Berger, the most prolific architect to work in Ridgewood, designed hundreds of two- to six-family houses for most of Ridgewood's builders. In 1910, when Paul Stier and another local builder, August Bauer, formed Bauer & Stier, Inc., Berger was not only its resident architect, but also the secretary-treasurer of the firm. Berger also served as the president of the Brooklyn Society of Architects.

The Stier/Berger block fronts adhere to the long-established custom of placing, at either end of a row (usually at street corners) small apartment houses that are fully built out to the lot lines, while the row houses at the center of the block are recessed from the sidewalks to allow for front gardens. Within the Central Ridgewood Historic District, the end bay of each row house that abuts a corner apartment house is usually angled to unite the two façade planes. This framing technique produces a sense of enclosure, so that many of Ridgewood's block fronts and streetscapes resemble plazas.

One of the most striking characteristics of the Stier rows is the consistent use of bay fronts, mostly curved, on every block, creating a rhythmic effect that is often heightened by alternating brick colors from house to house and/or from row to row. Berger used three basic designs for Stier's bay front houses, a three-bay wide-model with a shallow curved bay incorporating two bays, another shallow bay model with full-width, open porches, and a four-bay-wide model featuring a more pronounced curved projection containing three-bays. Berger was able to give visual interest to these rows of nearly identical houses by specifying subtle variations in the use of brick, stone, and metal, while using consistent cornice lines to unify the rows. Most of the original windows appear to have been wood, one-over-one sash with wood brick molds decorated with egg-and-dart moldings. The glazing of the original sash at the curved bays did not appear to have been curved.

The shallow bay houses, which are typical of the earlier Stier developments, were built in 1907 (Illustration 3). They are two stories high on raised basements and three bays wide with two of the bays placed in shallow, curved projections. He continued to build these shallow bay rows through 1909. All of the houses were built with rough-faced brownstone stoops, as well as cast-iron newel posts and wrought-iron side railings. However, Berger chose to subtly vary the brick palette and façade ornament among the rows. On some of the rows, for example, he specified one color of brick for all of the houses, while on other rows, he alternated the brick color from house to house. Variations in detailing from row to row include rough-faced, smooth, or incised window lintels, bracketed entryway lintels either of molded cast iron or incised stone, rough-faced brick or smooth cast-stone bandcourses, and recessed, rough-faced brick panels below the first-story sills on some of the rows. All of the facades are crowned by similar bracketed, pressed-metal cornices decorated with swags, and a combination of modillions, bead moldings, and egg-and-dart moldings. Typical examples of Stier's shallow bay houses include 60-11 to 60-43 71th Avenue (1907), 60-10 to 60-44 70th Avenue (1907), 70-02 to 70-20 60th Lane (1907), and 60-16 to 60-20 Putnamth Road (1909).

The second type of Stier house also features shallow bay projections, but the facades have full-width porches (Illustration 4), many of which have been altered. Originally, the porches were similar to those found on houses in the nearby and previously-designated Stockholm Street Historic District, which were also designed by Louis Berger & Company. These open wood porches sat on brick supporting columns and were reached by way of graystone stoops with cast-iron newel posts and wrought-iron railings. The landings were enclosed by wood railings and the porch roofs, which had molded cornices, were supported by Tuscan columns. Three adjacent rows, all constructed in 1908, have these porches: 60-02 to 60-54 69th Avenue, 60-01 to 60-49 69th Avenue, and 60-01 to 60-49 70th Avenue.

The third, and most common type of Stier house, of which over 200 were built between 1908 and 1912, have more pronounced bay projections. They are two or three stories high on raised or full-height basements (Illustrations 5 and 6). They were built with rough-faced brownstone stoops with solid brownstone side walls, most of which remain intact. As in the shallow bay houses, Berger chose to subtly vary the brick palette and façade ornament among these rows. Examples include 60-55 to 60-99 69th Avenue (1908), 60-57 to 60-99 70th Avenue (1908), 59-02 to 59-38 Catalpa Avenue (1909), 60-43 to 60-89 68th Avenue (1909), 60-50 to 60-70 68th Road (1909), 60-51 to 60-89 68th Road (1909), 60-56 to 60-98 69th Avenue (1909), 60-51 to 60-87 67th Avenue (1909), 60-22 to 60-26 68th Road (1910), and 60-78 to 60-82 Putnam Avenue (1911-12).

Stier and Berger also developed a number of buildings that differ somewhat in appearance to their curved bay houses, including brick row houses with angled bays, such as 60-40 to 60-42 68th Avenue and 60-35 to 60-39 68th Avenue (both 1911) and the flat-fronted, two-story row, which originally had ground-floor stores, at 70-01 to 70-09 60th Street (1907). In addition, corner buildings were usually treated by Stier and Berger differently from the mid-block row houses. These three-story buildings were mostly built with ground-level storefronts and upper-story apartments, such as 60-01 69th Avenue (1908) and 59-02 Catalpa Avenue (1909); the upper level ornament on these facades usually matches that of the adjacent rows. In some instances, such as 60-46 Putnam Avenue (1909) and 60-52 67th Avenue (1910), three-story apartment houses without ground-level storefronts were built by Stier and Berger at the block front corners. Lacking the curved bays of the adjacent mid-block houses, these buildings nevertheless display the same brick and stone detailing as their neighbors.

Stier and Berger were able to complete houses at a very fast pace because they used only a handful of basic floor plans,³⁹ as well as façade designs to which different surface treatments were applied. Unity was achieved by strings of unbroken cornice lines. Furthermore, the brick party walls between separate buildings within each row had interior relieving arches that appear to have been left open during construction to facilitate movement through the houses, thereby saving time by eliminating the need for workers and materials to enter and exit each house individually from street level by way of stoops and stairs. These arches probably remained opened until the houses were nearly complete.

Other Builders

Several other builders and developers contributed buildings to the Central Ridgewood Historic District. Since many of them used Louis Berger & Company to prepare their plans, the row houses built by these men are usually very similar in appearance to those developed by Paul Stier.

August Bauer,⁴⁰ who trained as a carpenter, was one of the Ridgewood area's earliest developers of row houses. Born in Bavaria in 1860, he immigrated to America in 1882 and settled in Ridgewood in 1893. He built several hundred houses through the turn of the century, including many wood-frame rows and, later, some of the first brick rows in the neighborhood, most of which were designed by Louis Berger & Company. In addition to being an astute businessman, Bauer, who lived in nearby Bushwick, was also civically active and was a member of several local organizations, including the Ridgewood Democratic Club, the Wyckoff Heights Taxpayers Association, and the Ridgewood Board of Trade. In 1910, August Stier joined Paul Stier to form Bauer & Stier, Inc., which continued to develop housing in Ridgewood and nearby areas of Queens. Bauer built the row at 60-55 to 60-95 71st Avenue (1908) and 60-94 and 60-96 70th Avenue (1908), all designed by Berger and resembling houses built by Paul Stier (Illustration 7).

Kilian Schurger developed several rows within the historic district.⁴¹ Schurger immigrated to New York from Germany in 1881, and by 1913 was responsible for the construction of over 200 buildings in greater Ridgewood. His rows include 59-01 to 59-37 69th Avenue (1908) and 59-26 to 59-40 69th Avenue (1908), all designed by Berger and resembling houses built by Paul Stier. In 1910, according to census data, Schurger owned and occupied 87 Foxall Street (now 59-37 69th Avenue) in the historic district, a house he constructed in 1908.

Henry Schlachter (1860-1921)⁴² was born in Germany, and came to the United States in 1880 to begin his career as a mason. He was active in the Bushwick and Ridgewood areas, constructing both two-family houses and larger, six-family flats. He also worked on the construction of the rectory of the St. Matthias R.C. Church, which is located in the adjacent Ridgewood South Historic District. Later, he developed single family homes north of Jamaica Village. In the Central Ridgewood Historic District, he built a row of two-story row houses with ground-floor storefronts at 58-26 to 58-38 Catalpa Avenue (1908, Adam Schlachter, architect).

Jacob Rodler⁴³ (b.1869) was another prominent developer in Ridgewood. Rodler was born in Germany and began his career in Queens as a framer. Shortly after the turn of the 20th century, he began to work as a builder of multi-family frame, and later, masonry buildings. Rodler relocated his company to Hempstead, Long Island in the 1920s. Rodler built the row of three story-houses at 917 to 939 Onderdonk Avenue (1911), designed by Louis Allmendinger (Illustration 8). These houses feature projecting, multi-story piers on brackets, foiliated entryway lintels on brackets, molded window lintels, and bracketed pressed metal cornices with swags and scrolled modillions.

Ignatz Martin ⁴⁴ (1864-1921) built many houses in the historic district, including some of the district's first brick rows (Discussed above in Farms and Early Developments. Born in Germany, Martin immigrated to the United States in 1898 and by 1900 had established himself as a real estate operator residing in Bushwick. By 1915, he had moved to Richmond Hill. He also built a later row at 59-12 to 59-26 68th Avenue (1911, Louis Berger & Company, architects) that closely resembles many of Stier's rows.

Anton Kluepfel⁴⁵ was born in Steinfeld, Germany, in 1870 and immigrated to America as a teenager in 1886. After working as a baker and a sailor, he established himself as a builder by 1900 and produced a number of rows located in the Central Ridgewood Historic District, sometimes in partnership with his brother, George,. In 1910, Anton owned and occupied 2346 Madison Street (now 59-48 Madison Street), a house he built in 1907 as part of a row from 59-32 to 59-48 Madison Street (Louis Berger & Company, architects). A small street in the historic District is named Kleupfel Court may have been named for the Kluepfels, although the street name appears to have been misspelled.

The builder, Christian Doenecke ⁴⁶ (b.1859), built a number of houses in the historic district. Born in Helmershansen, Germany, Doenecke immigrated to the United States in 1883 and became a naturalized citizen in 1886. By 1894, Doenecke was a practicing mason living in Brooklyn, where he continued to reside with his family for many years. He later formed a construction company, incorporated as Christian Doenecke & Co., which was dissolved in 1931. Doenecke's wife, Katherina Kaepfel Doenecke, also a German native, was listed as the owner of many of the properties he developed. In later years, the Doeneckes lived in White Plains, New York. The Doeneckes built 58-03 to 58-47 69th Avenue (1909) and 59-29 to 59-35 Catalpa Avenue (1913), all designed by Berger and similar to the houses built by Paul Stier.

John Eisenhauer ⁴⁷ (1869-1938), another builder of several houses in the historic district, including some of the earliest rows, was born in Baden, Germany, and immigrated to the United States as a child with his family, who was headed by Nicolas Eisenhauer, a carpenter by trade. By 1880, the family was living in Brooklyn. John followed in the footsteps of his father and was established as a carpenter by 1900. He resided in Ridgewood, where he appears to have remained for the rest of his life. Eisenhauer built the rows at 59-22 to 59-30 Madison Street (1907) and 59-15 to 59-35 Madison Street (1907-08), all designed by Louis Berger & Company.

Charles Fritz ⁴⁸ (b.1848) of the development team Fritz & Barudio, immigrated to Ridgewood from Germany as a child in the late 1870s, and began working as a builder in 1895. He constructed many multiple dwellings in Ridgewood, including some in the Ridgewood South Historic District, sometimes in partnership with fellow German Joseph Barudio. In the Central Ridgewood Historic District, Fritz & Barudio built the row of tenements at 59-01 to 59-11 Catalpa Avenue (1908), which were designed by Louis Berger & Company (Illustration 9). These three-story buildings, which are more ornate than most of Berger's other designs within the historic district, feature coursed brickwork, rough-faced lintels and carved keystones containing faces, and multi-story piers on corbelled brackets topped by capitals with floral carvings.

*Kreischer Brick and Other Suppliers*⁴⁹

The brick manufacturing firm that would later become B. Kreischer & Sons was founded by Balthazar Kreischer (1813-1886) in 1845. Kreischer was born in Bavaria and came to New York City in 1836, where he worked for a period as a mason helping to rebuild lower Manhattan after the great fire of 1835. In the early 1850s, Kreischer was one of the first in the United States to produce fire brick, a fire resistant brick used in many industrial buildings. In 1853, Kreischer became aware of refractory clay deposits in Westfield, Staten Island, that were similar to the deposits at his original location in Woodbridge, New Jersey, just across the Arthur Kill. He acquired several tracts with clay deposits and purchased the rights to mine clay on nearby land. Two years later he established the brickworks on the Arthur Kill. As the factory expanded, the area became known as Kreischerville. By the time of Kreischer's retirement in 1878, the company had become a major producer of building materials in the metropolitan area. Kreischer's sons continued the firm, but financial problems forced them to sell the company in 1899.

acquired B. Kreischer & Sons at foreclosure, reincorporating the company as the Kreischer Brick Manufacturing Company in 1902. This ushered in the company's heyday during the early twentieth century when it produced brick of all colors and types, along with ornamental terra cotta. The company's products were used by architects and builders throughout the East and Midwest. The company's prominence declined after the First World War, and the factory was closed in 1927.

Most of the Kreischer brick used in Ridgewood, including the Central Ridgewood Historic District, is light-colored iron-spot brick with smooth surfaces, laid with tight, flush joints.⁵⁰ Rock-faced brick, also manufactured by Kreischer, was used in Ridgewood for details such as band courses and decorative panels. Paul Stier hired a pair of local masons, James Reilly and John MacDonald, to supervise a staff of 50 or so bricklayers, many of whom were German and Italian immigrants, to build his Ridgewood houses, including the installation of the face brick and stone ornament.

Other builders in Ridgewood also used Kreischer brick consistently until the First World War; after that, they used wire-cut bricks produced at factories in Pennsylvania. These bricks had rough-surfaces and were laid with raked joints, producing a very different appearance.

Local companies, many of which were owned by people of German descent, supplied much of the original stone, ironwork, and millwork found on the houses in the Central Ridgewood Historic District. The Evergreen Steam Stone Works, which was located on Myrtle Avenue and Decatur Street, just half a block south of the historic district, produced most of the stone used for the stoops and as applied ornament. The company, founded in 1890, manufactured both machine cut and hand-carved stonework. Two firms produced most of the iron newel posts, railings, fences and gates. The Ridgewood Iron Works Company, founded in 1870, was located nearby in Bushwick and Charles Strubel & Sons, founded in 1901, located on Myrtle Avenue. Strubel, a resident of Ridgewood, owned and occupied 89 Edsall Avenue (now 60-19 70th Avenue) within the historic district. Charles Rothenbach, Inc., founded in Ridgewood in 1904, manufactured most of the window frames and sash, as well as doors and interior woodwork.

The end product of this tight network of mainly German tradesmen was an urban community characterized by its human scale, pleasing appearance, solid construction, and the great care that went into every stage of development, including the designs of the houses, the siting of the rows on their blocks, the building of the structures themselves, and the high-quality finish work both inside and out.

Other Building Types

In addition to the hundreds of row houses in the historic district, a number of other building types, such as freestanding houses, tenements, apartment houses, and garages, as well as a church and parish house, were built.

In addition to the two freestanding houses developed in 1906 by the farmer Joseph Meyerrose, discussed above in Farms and Early Developments, other houses include the cement block house at 59-24 69th Avenue (1908; Slee & Bryson, architects), the brownstone-fronted house at 58-20 69th Avenue (1909; Sigfried H. Schmidt, architect), and the brick houses at 58-18 69th Avenue (1911; Louis Allmendinger) and 60-02 Madison Street (1908; John H. Vandervegt, Jr.). All of these houses are similar to the surrounding row houses in terms of height, width, and ornament.

Around fifty tenements were constructed in the historic district. These include 60-23 to 60-31 68th Avenue (1906; Louis Berger & Co.), 59-01 to 59-11 Catalpa Avenue (1908; Louis Berger & Co.); 59-11 to 59-25 71st Avenue (1910; architect not determined); 60-11 to 60-19 Madison Street (1912-13; Louis Berger & Co.) and 60-64 to 60-84 71st Avenue (1915; Louis Berger & Co.). The tenements developed after 1910 tend to have more Arts and Crafts style façade elements; whereas the earlier buildings feature mainly Renaissance Revival style detailing.

One 20th-century apartment house was built within the Central Ridgewood Historic District at 59-36 70th Avenue (1923, Cohn Bros., architects). It is one of the largest buildings in the historic district. Located at the corner of its block, the building has four stories and occupies most of its 50 by 100 foot lot. It has two fully-developed facades featuring an array of Art and Crafts style detailing, such as decorative brick panels, header brick window lintels with large keystones, and a blocky, stylized cornice.

The Gothic Revival style Lutheran Church and Parsonage of the Covenant at 60-52 Catalpa Avenue was built in 1914-15 from designs made by architect Carl L. Otto. The building features English cross bond, label molding, Gothic-arched window, buttresses, a decorative brick cross in gable, and a square corner tower. The congregation, which was founded in 1909 and held its first services in a nearby storefront, purchased the land at the corner of Catalpa Avenue and 60th Lane in 1911.⁵¹

The Neighborhood in the Early to Middle 20th Century⁵²

Between 1906 and 1911, Ridgewood was considered to be one of the fastest growing sections of the city with much of the incoming population made up of native Germans and their descendants moving in from Manhattan's east side and Brooklyn's Williamsburg. Compared with those areas that were filled with overcrowded and rundown houses, Ridgewood offered modern, up-to-date and affordable housing in a healthful and convenient environment.⁵³

A partial review of census information from 1910, during the height of development in the Central Ridgewood Historic District, paints a clear picture of upward mobility for immigrants and their children, who represented the vast majority of the population. That these families were able to afford to buy and occupy brand new, up-to-date private houses within a generation of arriving in the United States testifies both to their work ethic and industriousness and the imagination and creativity of Ridgewood's builders, who were able to make these spacious, comfortable homes affordable to people of modest means.⁵⁴

The 1910 Census also confirms that the neighborhood had a distinct German flavor. Almost all of the residents in the studied area were of German ancestry, either having been themselves born in greater Germany or having at least one parent who emigrated from that area.⁵⁵ There was also a very high rate of home ownership; all but one of the fifty houses studied were owner occupied. Generally, the owners occupied one apartment and rented the others to help cover the mortgage and building maintenance.

The residents found work in a mix of blue collar and low-level professional jobs, including engineer, store manager, brewer, butcher, baker, policeman, letter carrier, salesman, clerk, bookkeeper, accountant, insurance inspector, factory worker, shoemaker, printer, and tool maker. A large number of residents were involved in the construction industry, probably reflecting the frenzied pace of new construction occurring the area at the time. Jobs included builder or contractor, electrician, mason, carpenter, plasterer, painter, plumber, stone cutter, and metal worker.

In 1920 and 1930, the ethnic makeup and employment patterns of the residents were little changed from 1910 according census data, although the number of owner-occupied houses declined in both years, dropping to 44 of 50 in 1920 and to 37 of 50 in 1930. This may perhaps reflect the gradual movement of many of the original owners to suburban areas, made possible by rise of automobile ownership. By 1940, Germanic and northern European last names still predominated, but there was now a scattering of families with roots in southern Europe among the residents. Blue collar work and low-level professional jobs continued to be the most common forms of employment. All but four of the houses were owner occupied at the time, suggesting that interest in home ownership had recovered from the depression of the 1930s. The census records also show that many of the children of the original residents, as adults, also set up their own households in Ridgewood, often in houses nearby to their parents' homes or in the very same houses, which they sometimes inherited and continued to occupy after the older generation passed on. In 1939, the WPA Guide called the area "old-fashioned and respectable."⁵⁶ Ridgewood remained a working- and middle-class neighborhood throughout the rest of the 20th century.

One of the biggest changes to have occurred in the Central Ridgewood Historic District was the renaming of most of the streets in the Ridgewood area by the Board of Alderman in 1925. The proposal to superimpose a rational numbering system to the streets of Queens dated back to 1911 when Queens Borough President Maurice E. Connolly directed the Topographical Bureau to plan for the elimination of street name duplication that became a source of confusion and annoyance after unification of the boroughs and Queens' several towns and villages in 1898.⁵⁷ The plan was phased in across the borough between 1915 and 1926. Transportation to the Ridgewood area was enhanced in 1928 with the opening of the BMT subway along Wyckoff Avenue, just across the Brooklyn border, which provided service to 14th Street in Manhattan.

By the time the United States entered World War II in 1941, Ridgewood had developed into a full-fledged German American neighborhood featuring an array of churches, schools, libraries, social and political clubs, music halls, pork stores, bakeries, restaurants, beer gardens, and sports clubs, a few of which were located within the Central Ridgewood Historic District, such as the Covenant Lutheran Church at 60-52 Catalpa Avenue, the Ridgewood Democratic Club at 60-70 Putnam Avenue, and the Queens Labor Lyceum at 66-79 Forest Avenue.

Later History

The Central Ridgewood Historic District has remained largely intact to its original condition. Common alterations in the historic district include the removal and replacement of the historic storefronts on the ground floor of several corner buildings and mid-block, mixed-use buildings, and the enclosure and alteration of many of the original open porches along 69th and 70th Avenues. Other alterations include the installation of replacement windows and doors, the reconstruction or resurfacing of stoops, the replacement of stoop and areaway ironwork, and the installation of awnings at many entryways. A number of corner buildings had garage structures added at the rear of the lots, facing the side streets. Many of them were built within a few years of the completion of the houses, although some were built later in the 20th century. Most have been altered to some degree, especially the replacement of the original hinged doors with roll up units and the installation of roof decks. A small number have been converted to either residential or commercial space.

After the Second World War and continuing into the late 20th century, Ridgewood's large German population was joined by additional immigrants from Romania, Italy, Slovenia, Poland and Yugoslavia, as well as people from Puerto Rico. Later in the century, the neighborhood also drew large numbers of Chinese, Dominicans, Koreans, and Ecuadorians. Today, the neighborhood also attracts young people from Manhattan and Brooklyn looking for more affordable housing.

The rows of buildings within the Central Ridgewood Historic District, with their undulating brick facades, comprise some of the city's most intact streetscapes, retaining a large amount of integrity. The Central Ridgewood Historic District was intended from the beginning to be an attractive and comfortable community, affordable to families of modest means. The success of the area's early-twentieth century developers in achieving this goal is best demonstrated by the fact that Ridgewood continues to thrive along these very lines today.

in the borough. Changed street names within the Central Ridgewood Historic District include 71st Avenue (originally Van Courtlandt Avenue), 70th Avenue (Halleck Avenue and Edsall Avenue), 69th Avenue (Foxall Street), Catalpa Avenue (Elm Avenue), 68th Road (Silver Street), 68th Avenue (Hughes Street), 67th Avenue (Cornelia Street), 60th Lane (Buchman Avenue), 60th Street (Anthon Avenue), 60th Place (Prospect Avenue), and Madison Street (Ivy Street). Street names that remained unchanged were Onderdonk Avenue, Forest Avenue, Fresh Pond Road, Putnam Avenue, and Woodbine Street.

FINDINGS AND DESIGNATION

On the basis of careful consideration of the history, the architecture, and other features of this area, the Landmarks Preservation Commission finds that the Central Ridgewood Historic District contains buildings and other improvements that have a special character and a special historic and aesthetic interest and value and which represent one or more eras in the history of New York City and which cause this area, by reason of these factors, to constitute a distinct section of the city.

The Commission further finds that, among its important qualities, the Central Ridgewood Historic District consists of approximately 990 buildings constructed mainly between 1900 and the mid-1920s by German-Americans and immigrants from Germany; that many of the blockfronts, which feature projecting bays, uninterrupted cornice lines, and bricks produced by the Kreischer Brick Manufacturing Company of Staten Island, were designed by the architectural firm Louis Berger & Company and built by developers August Bauer and Paul Stier, all prominent builders of residential neighborhoods in Queens; that the buildings have fine detailing in the Renaissance Revival Style; that almost all of the original brownstone stoops remain intact, as do many of the original cut-glass and wood doors and iron railings, fences and gates; that the row houses form a cohesive collection of speculative urban architecture that represent an important part of the development of working-class housing in New York City; that the district retains high levels of architectural integrity and the ambience that has distinguished it since the early twentieth century; and that Ridgewood remains one of the most desirable places to live in New York City.

Accordingly, pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 74, Section 3020 of the Charter of the City of New York and Chapter 3 of Title 25 of the Administrative Code of the City of New York, the Landmarks Preservation Commission designates as a Historic District the Central Ridgewood Historic District consisting of an area bounded by a line beginning at the northwest corner of Fresh Pond Road and 71st Avenue, then extending westerly along the northern curbline of 71st Avenue to a point in said curbline formed by its intersection with a line extending northerly from the eastern property line of 60-84 71st Avenue, southerly across 71st Avenue and along said property line, westerly along the southern property lines of 60-84 to 60-56 71st Avenue, across 60th Lane and continuing westerly along the southern property lines of 60-50 to 60-34 71st Avenue, northerly along a portion of the western property line of 60-34 71st Avenue, westerly along the southern property lines of 60-32 to 60-20 71st Avenue, northerly along the western property line of 60-20 71st Avenue and across 71st Avenue to its northern curbline, westerly along said curbline, northerly along the western property line of 59-11 71st Avenue, easterly along the northern property line of 59-11 71st Avenue and a portion of the northern property line of 59-13 71st Avenue, northerly along the western property line of 59-22 70th Avenue and across 70th Avenue to its northern curbline, westerly along said curbline, continuing across Forest Avenue to the northeast corner of 70th Avenue and Onderdonk Avenue, northerly along the eastern curbline of Onderdonk Avenue, easterly along the southern curbline of Catalpa Avenue to the southeast corner of Catalpa Avenue and Forest Avenue, northerly across Catalpa Avenue and along the eastern curbline of Forest Avenue, easterly along the northern property lines of 59-01 to 59-11 Catalpa Avenue, northerly along the western property line of 59-14 68th Road and across 68th Road to its northern curbline, westerly along said curbline, northerly along the western property line of 59-13 68th Road, easterly along a portion of the northern property line of 59-13 68th Road, northerly along the western property line of 59-12 68th Avenue to the Notable History and Residents: Anton Kluepfel was a builder of several houses within the Central Ridgewood Historic District. Kluepfel was born in Steinfeld Germany, in 1870 Anton immigrated to America as a teenager in 1866. After working as a baker and a sailor, he established himself as a builder by 1900 and produced a number of rows located in the Central Ridgewood Historic District, sometimes in partnership with his son, George. In 1910, Anton owned and occupied 23-46 Madison Street (now 59-48 Madison Street), a house he built as part of a row in the historic district in 1907. A small street in the District is named Kleupfel Court may have been named for the Kluepfels, although the street name appears to have been misspelled

ARCHITECTS' APPENDIX

Louis Allmendinger (1878-1937)

69-11 and 69-13 Forest Avenue (1911)
917 to 939 Onderdonk Avenue (1911)
58-18 69th Avenue (1911)

Architect Louis Allmendinger, born in Brooklyn, was the son of a German-immigrant, beer-brewer. A graduate of the Cooper Union, Allmendinger was working as an architect as early as 1901. Based in Bushwick, Brooklyn, he worked both for himself and for various architects until 1922 when he established his own firm, specializing in industrial and commercial buildings. Allmendinger's work also included other types of buildings, including the Russian Orthodox Cathedral of the Transfiguration of Our Lord in Brooklyn (1916-21, a designated New York City Landmark) and its Parish House (1916). In 1926, he formed a partnership with M. Allen Schlendorf (b.1902) which lasted until the Allmendinger's death. Continuing to practice in Brooklyn, the new firm was responsible for numerous institutional, industrial, and commercial designs, including the Former J. Kurtz & Sons Store Building in Queens (1931, a designated New York City Landmark), the German Masonic Temple in Manhattan, the Liebmann Brewery and North American Brewery in Brooklyn, as well as the Ehler Coffee Plant, also in Brooklyn. After Allmendinger's death in 1937, Schlendorf, who had studied at both the Cooper Union and Columbia University, continued the practice under his own name. Allmendinger also designed many buildings in the Ridgewood North and South Historic Districts.

Louis Berger & Company (b.1875)

(Note): At least 800 buildings in the district were designed by or attributed to Louis Berger and Company.

The firm Louis Berger & Company, which produced the plans for the overwhelming majority of buildings within the Central Ridgewood Historic District, was the architect of record for over 5,000 buildings in the Ridgewood and Bushwick areas between 1895 and 1930. Born in Rheinpfalz, Germany, Berger immigrated to America as a young boy in 1880 and settled in Ridgewood in 1892. He studied architecture at Pratt Institute in Brooklyn and served as an apprentice with the firm Carrere & Hastings before establishing his own firm in Bushwick in 1895. His specialty was the design of tenement houses and in the laws governing their construction. In 1910, when, Ridgewood's biggest builder, Paul Stier, formed Bauer & Stier, Inc. with fellow builder August Bauer, Berger was not only its resident architect, but also the secretary-treasurer of the firm. Berger also served as the president of the Brooklyn Society of Architects. The firm's work is also found in the Stockholm Street Historic District.

Henry C. Brucker (1888-1980)

60-14 to 60-24 Madison Street (1920)
58-01 69th Avenue (1921)

Architect Henry C. Brucker was born in New York to parents of German ancestry. Before establishing his own practice, he worked in the offices of the well-known Brooklyn architect Francis J. Berlenbach, who designed many Roman Catholic churches in Brooklyn and Queens, including two in Ridgewood. Brucker, who resided in Ridgewood for at least 65 year until his death, prepared the plans for the construction of and alterations to many residential, commercial, and industrial buildings, mainly located in Queens and Brooklyn.

Cohn Bros.

59-36 70th Avenue (1923)

The Cohn Bros. architectural firm, which specialized in the design of apartment houses, opened its first office in the Flatbush area in 1910, and remained in operation through the early 1950s. Its most-active period was in the 1930s and 40s, when it designed many apartment houses in Brooklyn and Queens, where the firm's work is widely represented in the Jackson Heights Historic District. The firm, whose work is also found in the Crown Heights North, Clinton Hill, Bedford Stuyvesant/Expanded Stuyvesant Heights Historic District, and Prospect Park South Historic Districts, drew upon a variety of historical sources for their designs, mainly the architecture of England or the Mediterranean area.

Koch & Wagner

Arthur R. Koch (1874-1952)

Charles C. Wagner (1876-1957)

60-56 to 60-62 71st Avenue (1911)

Arthur R. Koch and Charles C. Wagner formed an architectural partnership in 1910 which they maintained until 1951, when Wagner retired to Florida. During that period, they were responsible for the designs of numerous industrial, commercial and residential properties, primarily in Brooklyn and Queens. Both men were born in Brooklyn and graduated from Pratt Institute, and both served terms as president of the Brooklyn chapter of the American Institute of Architects. Previous to 1910, Wagner worked for several years on the design of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. In addition to architecture, Koch helped found and then served on the board of the People's National Bank. He was also a director of the East River Savings and Loan Association and the Bohack Realty Corporation. Mr. Wagner served as a director of the Bay Ridge Savings and Loan Association. Throughout their long careers, Koch & Wagner designed many bank buildings throughout Brooklyn, including several for the People's National Bank, and others that were developed by the Bohack Realty Corporation. They had a long and productive career, and seemed to specialize in commercial designs in urban environments. They also designed the Ralph Bunche House and the Ridgewood Lodge No. 710, Free and Accepted Masons, both designated NYC landmarks. The row of tenements the firm designed in the Central Ridgewood Historic District is among its earliest works.

Adam Schlachter (1883-1964)

58-26 to 58-38 Catalpa Avenue (1910)

Adam Schlachter, the architect of record for one row of houses in the historic district, was born in New York to German immigrants that settled in Bushwick. City directories and census data indicate that he was a mason. His father, Henry Schlachter (1860-1921), who was the builder of record of the row, was alternately listed in city directories as a mason or builder beginning in 1887. In 1912, the elder Schlachter was listed as living at 58-38 Catalpa Avenue, one of the houses that he and his son built in the Central Ridgewood Historic District.

Slee & Bryson

John Slee (1875-1947)

Robert Bryson (1875-1938)

59-24 69th Avenue (1908)

The firm of Slee & Bryson, founded around 1905 by John Slee and Robert Bryson, was in business for over a quarter of a century. Slee was born in Maryland and studied at the Maryland Institute before coming to New York. Bryson was born in Newark, New Jersey, and educated in Brooklyn. Early in their careers, both men worked for the architect John J. Petit. After forming a partnership, Slee & Bryson designed many buildings in Brooklyn, including Colonial Revival and neo-Tudor style houses, such as those found in Prospect Park South, Ditmas Park, and the Prospect Lefferts Gardens Historic Districts. The firm was most active in the design of early-twentieth-century neo-Federal and neo-Georgian-style row houses. Their designs in these styles are found on Albemarle Terrace in the Albemarle-Kenmore Terrace Historic District, and in the Crown Heights North Historic District.

Walter B. Wills (b.1872)

58-50 to 58-58 Catalpa Avenue (1907-08)
59-22 to 59-30 70th Avenue (1907)

Architect Walter B. Wills, who was born in New York to American father and a German mother, began working as a draftsman as a teenager, and was practicing in Brooklyn by the time he was in his early 20s. He designed mainly row houses and tenements, but also freestanding houses, movie theaters, and apartment houses in Brooklyn, Queens, and Long Island. He also designed the first phase of construction of the (former) St. George's Syrian Catholic Church, a designated NYC landmark.
